From Eliyahu

Hello Friends,

The pace of the changing news cycle each week is dizzying.

It is as if the whole world is on a visit to Disney World. You never know what is going to pop out at you next, or what unbelievable sight or experience is about to greet you. While the never-ending parade of the unexpected at Disney World can be interesting for a while, you would never want to live there. Before long you just want to get your family in your car to go home, to get some blessed normalcy.

Unfortunately, unlike Disney World, there is no viable escape from this crazy world we all live in. Instead, we all must endure an unyielding expectation of the unexpected, with ever-growing uncertainty seeming to be the only constant. This ever-looming uncertainty is a persistent emotional pressure on all the people of the world.

At Disney World the parade of unexpected events are planned and purposeful, meant to create a predictable emotional response in patrons. Could the same be true of the events that are keeping all of us in a state of uncertainty in this world? In other words, could the "managers" of this world actually be manipulating the world events of the news cycle to elicit a series of responses that will eventually bring the main body of mankind to the place they ultimately want to take us - a place we otherwise would never go?

Could they actually be creating constant uncertainty for a reason?

Surely, uncertainty effects our emotions, which in turn, effects our actions.

Generally, uncertainty elicits a wait-and-see response. Uncertainty keeps us from acting, because we don't know what will happen - so we tend to keep going as we are.

This emotional inertia works in the interests of the manipulators, allowing them to keep introducing ever more social change and control of the population, constantly bringing the world closer to the desired goals - even while violating vital interests of the general population. This has worked wonders in moving the world forward along a per-planned globalist trajectory, notably so during the last decade.

Of course, there is a point where the pain caused by the globalist manipulators becomes so great that it outweighs the inertia caused by uncertainty. When that tipping-point is reached significant push-back by the people is inevitable. We are seeing that now, in a resurgence of nationalism, with the Brexit vote, and the rise of Donald Trump being the two most notable examples.

Many freedom-loving people are feeling exuberant at these developments. They are hopeful that this nationalistic revival will overturn globalism, resulting in a new golden age of freedom and prosperity for the world. I'm sure every sane person would want that - I know I do. However, I also know that hoped-for golden age cannot come by a revival of nationalism.

Here are three reasons why nationalism cannot bring a golden age:

1. History - Nationalism has always ultimately failed.
2. The Globalists - This nationalistic resurgence is not unexpected by them. It had to happen. The globalists have both the plan and the resources to use this resurgence of nationalism as a launching pad to launch their agenda even closer to their ultimate goal.
3. The Scripture can never be broken.
