From Eliyahu

When I was a boy scientists taught something called the "Steady State Theory" - a scheme in which the universe was thought to have always existed. In that scheme the ages of creation could not be measured because you can't measure infinity.

That theory was replaced by the "Big Bang Theory" which still prevails, though beset by many logical problems and puzzles. The gist of the theory is that nothing [they speak of nothing as if it is something while still insisting it is nothing] exploded and in less than a second the universe was created. They have carefully dissected the proposed first second into tiny segments, laying out when each element spontaneously sprung from nothingness into existence.

It is hard to believe that educated men even dare to teach such an obviously absurd proposition, and attempting to add precision to the absurdity only makes it more absurd still. Nevertheless, they stubbornly hold on to this albatross for dear life because the alternative, a created universe, is simply not acceptable to them.

Scientists have not always been so ridiculous. Renowned scientific minds of the past accepted the obvious, that the universe has a Creator, so simply sought to understand how it works. Johannes Kepler (yes, the same Kepler who is famous for his laws of planetary motion) said this:

"Those laws [of nature] are within the grasp of the human mind; God wanted us to recognize them by creating us after his own image so that we could share in his own thoughts." Johannes Kepler

Many noted scientists today think that Sir Isaac Newton was the greatest scientific mind of all time. Really, he was astounding in his scientific discoveries in physics, optics and mathematics, just to name a few areas he completely revolutionized.

"He who thinks half-heartedly will not believe in God; but he who really thinks has to believe in God." Isaac Newton

Virtually all learned men from the dawn of modern science saw the universe in essentially the same way as Newton and Kepler - as the work of a Grand Creator.

Newton, Kepler, and other noted scholars like them attempted to measure the Ages of Creation. This was perfectly natural that they should attempt to do so, since they felt that man was made to search out the secrets of God, to give Him glory. I believe that too. Like those men of true science, I also have turned to the Scriptures to discover the secrets of Creation that our Father desires to reveal. Among those secrets can be found the Ages of Creation. I will be sharing my discoveries with you, live tonight, as part of our BattleCry 2018 live streamed events.

Also tonight, the event you have been waiting for - Linda Rose of Spiritsong, streamed live from us to you!

Is this going to be great? Well, yesterday Linda was just practicing and she ended up with almost our whole group here dancing and singing along with her! If practice is like this what will the real thing be like? This has got to be awesome - so don't miss it!

Take it all in via our live video stream, right on the front page, at www.tsiyon.org at 8 pm CST. It's free, no hassles, and no required signups. Just come, invite your friends, and be blessed!

Shalom,

Eliyahu ben David
