From Elijah:

Shalom friends,

I just read an article in the Atlantic that details the change in attitudes of young men and women towards each other these days. Instead of being naturally drawn together as in generations past, millions of young men and young women go out of their way to avoid people of the opposite sex. Marriage is at an all time low, and so is child-bearing. Simple and innocent approaches, like a man politely speaking a word to a woman he doesn't know on an elevator, are considered "creepy" by some young women, and the whole idea of considering marriage is now seen as simply too stressful for a growing number of young people to even deal with, the Atlantic reports. This trend seems to be plaguing the entire western world, with the dearth of resultant childbirth actually putting the survival of some entire countries at demographic risk.

Apparently, there are a host of reasons for all of this, but I can't help but put the lion's share of the blame on the social engineering and change that has been going on since the mid-twentieth century. How can we expect people who were deposited in daycare at 6 weeks old, and then shifted through an unending string of new caregivers until adulthood, to form a close and lasting relationship with someone of the opposite sex? No wonder these young folks have such a hard time making a satisfying emotional connection. Of course, the result is anger and depression, and general dissatisfaction with everything and everyone. And indeed, an increase in mental illness among young people is increasing. This rise in mental illness, especially focused on the teen community, was addressed in an article in Psychology Today entitled The Alarming Rise in Teen Mental Illness. Here is a quote:

From this week's fatal shooting at a Kentucky high school to the alarming rise of teen suicides and depression, something is terribly wrong with our nation's youth. The past few years have witnessed an escalation in teen suicides and anxious, depressed, and suicidal students crowding college counseling centers (Center for Collegiate Mental Health). <https://www.psychologytoday.com/us/blog/your-personal-renaissance/201801/the-alarming-rise-in-teen-mental-illness>

This article went on to associate the internet with this growing problem, saying:

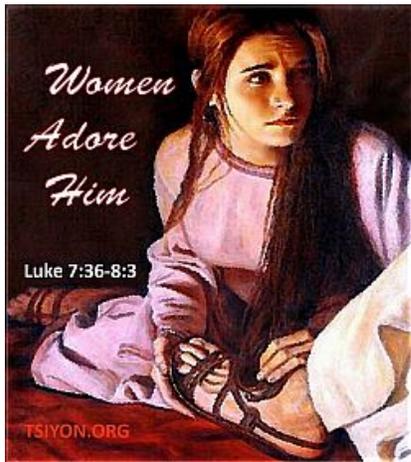

In surveys of over five hundred thousand American adolescents, psychologist Jean Twenge and her colleagues found that adolescents, especially girls, who spent more time on screen activities (smartphones, Internet, and social media) were significantly more likely to have symptoms of depression and suicidal ideation than those who spent their time on non-screen activities.

That's right. Studies indicate that smartphones, Internet, and social media are especially linked to mental illness in girls. Don't get me wrong, boys have their own problems related to the internet. However, when you are talking about a spectrum of depression all the way to suicide, you are talking about a very serious, even life-threatening, problem for girls and young women.

It is too easy just to blame smartphones and social media for this, rather than seeing why these are such a problem. This digital age seems to be about escape from real human interaction. Cell phones, social media and the internet all have one thing in common; they give the illusion of relationship without real commitment or real emotional connection. All of us, especially women, need real relationships with real people we love to be emotionally well. For all of our technology and science today, women are more love-starved today than ever before. Let's face it. Our society has lost something of major importance, and the more we struggle to replace it, the more elusive it becomes. That missing thing? Real love.

The good news is, that love is out there, if you will just have the courage to find it, and when you find it, to accept it. The kind of love that truly satisfies is the generous, unselfish, and faithful love that comes from God. How telling is it that the farther our society gets from God, the less love people feel and the more desperate they become? They are rejecting the very thing, the only thing, that can stop the madness and make everything right. This world is too hung up on itself to ever allow that love in the door - but individuals still can and still do find that love. When they find it, and when they accept it - they are saved!

Dust off your Bible and take a look at the women in the Gospels. What happened when their lives were touched by the Messiah? The stories are stunning. Their hearts were filled with love and their lives were forever changed. What they saw and encountered in Him energized those women in amazing ways. They adored Him, and in adoring Him, they became sane, powerful and profoundly amazing from the inside out, in that special way that only a woman can. Women were created to be givers, and so they are. What fulfills a good woman's heart more than anything is giving that which is most precious within herself. That wonderful womanly trait melts the heart of every decent man among us. See, then, what happened with those needy women who were touched by Messiah. They not only received what they needed - they received more than they could ever imagine! They became empowered to give with an unending supply of love streaming through their hearts directly from the inexhaustible heart of God!

Truly saved women are awesome to behold!

Join us tonight online to consider how some awesome women were changed through their encounters with Messiah, and how some of them actually became a part of His ministry team, to bless us all!

That's tonight at our live Tsiyon Meeting, at 8 PM CST at Tsiyon.Net. Please join us!

Shalom,

Elijah

Eliyahu's Commentary: The article below reports the latest in a series of developments suggesting a perception of a new vulnerability of Israel to her enemies. Israel's blockade of the Hamas terrorists failed, and Israel has even rewarded Hamas with a ceasefire and a pay-off of millions of dollars. Citing "threats from the north, the south and the west" as the reason for this capitulation, while very real, must be seen by Israel's enemies as evidence of Israeli weakness and fear. The potential shattering of the present government coalition must be read by Israel's enemies as disunity and confusion, undermining IDF war-fighting capabilities. At this point, geo-politically speaking, only the strong support of the Trump White House deters Israel's enemies from an all out effort to defeat Israel, and only time will tell how long that deterrent can last. Clearly, YHWH has set up a situation to draw in Israel's enemies to their own destruction, and He controls the timing of events that will trigger foretold cataclysmic events.

Israel: Lieberman steps down as defense minister, says govt kowtows to terrorists

DEBKAFfile, Nov 14, 2018

Avigdor Lieberman resigned as Israel's defense minister on Wednesday, Nov. 14 over two issues: Israel's assent to the transfer of $15m to Gaza, and the Gaza ceasefire after nearly 500 missiles were fired into Israel. Lieberman found both decisions unacceptable and accused the government of failing to fight terror, citing "threats from the north, the south and the west" as pretexts, but were tantamount to "capitulating and kowtowing to terrorists."

He called for an agreed date for a general election as soon as possible, after withdrawing his Yisrael Beitenu (Jewish Home) party from the government coalition.

Answering reporters' question at the Knesset, Lieberman laid out in detail the reasons for his resignation. The cash payment to Hamas and the ceasefire were no better than an attempt to buy short term peace and quiet at the expense of long-term national security. He disclosed that Hamas allocated the first sums of the $15m of Qatari cash to the families of its agents killed in border clashes with Israel troops on the Gaza Strip, which meant that Israel was helping to fund terrorist actions.

Orders in writing from the prime minister at times forced him to act against his convictions, he said and cited the fuel deliveries fuel permitted for Gaza without making any demands of Hamas. Lieberman stressed that humanitarian aid to the population should be subject to the termination of terrorist operations, the return of the bodies of fallen Israeli soldiers and two hostages held by Hamas, and a Hamas commitment to halt the mob assaults on Israeli troops guarding the Gaza border fence.

DEBKAFfile reported earlier that during the security cabinet meeting on Tuesday, the defense minister was overruled in his demand for a major military operation against the Palestinian terrorist organizations led by Hamas and Islamic Jihad for subjecting southern Israel to a savage rocket assault. He discovered that Netanyahu and the army chiefs had already decided that Israel could not afford to simultaneously take on Hamas and the pressing threat from the North, and therefore Israel must accept Egyptian and UN efforts for a ceasefire. While cabinet ministers were discussing the Gaza issue, Netanyahu was running a parallel diplomatic track with international and Arab contacts outside the room. That is why he ended the critical cabinet session with a vague communique: "IDF attacks on Gaza will continue as required."

The defense minister and his other cabinet members had the sense that the prime minister had cast them in the role of film extras while pursuing the real action, totally at odds with his views, somewhere else. He had moreover cut the defense minister off from the military chiefs over whom he had charge.

Lieberman is the third defense minister to opt out of a government led by Netanyahu. His predecessors, Ehud Barak and Moshe Ya'alon, have become the prime minister's bitterest critics. Netanyahu will need to appoint a new defense minister without delay, given the urgent security challenges confronting the country. Rather than a cabinet shakeup, he may decide to call a snap general election and meanwhile appoint a temporary stand-in as minister of defense.
